Challenges in Clinical Electrocardiography

Is It Really Alternating Bundle-Branch Block?

Li Wang, MS; Caiyun Duan, BS; Lan Ma, MS

Case Presentation

A patient in their 60s was hospitalized with upper right quadrant discomfort for more than 10 days. The patient had a history of gastric cancer. Ultrasonography at a local hospital revealed multiple low-density foci in the liver. The patient had a history of coronary heart disease and had undergone a percutaneous coronary intervention at another hospital 1 year prior; the details were unknown. Laboratory examination showed a carcinoembryonic antigen level of 8.34 ng/mL (to convert to μg/L, multiply by 1.0). Myocardial enzyme examination showed no abnormalities. During the course of the disease, the patient had no symptoms, such as chest tightness, chest pain, or syncope. After admission, two 12-lead electrocardiogram (ECG) examinations were performed (Figure). The first ECG (Figure, A) showed a sinus rhythm; a left axis deviation of −81°; an rS pattern in leads II, III, and aVF with SIII greater than SII; a blunt terminal S wave in the limb leads; and an rsR′ pattern in lead III and stable PR interval, suggesting complete right bundle-branch block (CRBBB). The second ECG (Figure, B) suggested left anterior fascicular block (LAFB), though the second ECG does not completely support the diagnosis of CRBBB with left posterior fascicular block (LPFB).

Question: What causes such an apparent change in ECG findings?

Interpretation and Clinical Course

When interpreting the ECG, the key features to consider are the history of gastric cancer, the presence of low-density foci in the liver, and the absence of symptoms such as chest pain or syncope. In this case, the ECG findings are consistent with CRBBB, which is suggested by the flat terminal S wave in the limb leads, the rsR′ pattern in lead III, and the stable PR interval. The presence of LAFB is suggested by the rS pattern in leads II, III, and aVF and the SIII greater than SII. The clinical course of the patient should be carefully monitored, and further diagnostic tests should be considered to rule out other causes of the ECG findings.

A 51-year-old woman presented with a 1-month history of intense and worsening polyarthralgia and swelling of bilateral fingers and toes. There was no history of diabetes, oral ulcers, rashes, or Raynaud phenomenon. She did not report preceding fever, diarrhea, or dysuria. There was no history of weight loss or anorexia. Medical history included tertiary hyperparathyroidism diagnosed in the past due to end-stage kidney disease from chronic glomerulonephritis. The patient had successfully received an ABO-incompatible kidney transplant 1 year ago, but there was a complication (multidrug-resistant infection of the central nervous system. Medications included Ciprofloxacin and orales, azithromycin, and ursodiol). On examination, her fingers and toes were symmetrically and slightly tender. There were no rubs, enthesitis, psoriatic nail changes, clubbing, or lower limb edema. The rest of the physical examination was unremarkable. Radiography of her hands was performed (Figure).

Missing Issue & Sales Tax Information

Important Sales Tax Information
AMA is required by law to collect sales tax on orders shipped to states where AMA has economic nexus. If you are shipping to any of these states, the appropriate charges will be added to your total order and displayed on your final order confirmation.

For states imposing sales or use taxes, your purchase is subject to use tax unless it is specifically exempt from taxation. Your purchase is not exempt merely because it is made over the Internet or by other remote means. Some states require each purchaser to report any taxable purchase that was not taxed and to pay use tax on the purchase. The tax may be reported and paid on the state’s individual income tax return or consumer use tax return. Details of how to file these returns may be found at the websites of your respective taxing authorities.
