when translating results from adults to children (children are not just small adults). To account for the possibility that results observed in adults cannot be directly applied to children, 2 down-weighting factors were applied (50% and 25%) to limit its influence on the results of the analyses with little effect on conclusions.

CORRECTION

Error in Title: In the Images in Neurology article titled “Magnetic Resonance Imaging Features of Tropical Candidal Meningoencephalitis,” published in the March 2022 issue, there was an error in the title. “Tropical” should have been “Tropicalis.” This article has been corrected online.
